Who is the Police and Crime Commissioner? What does he do?

Stephen Bett is the Police and Crime Commissioner. He talks to people in Norfolk to find out about the crime and policing problems that worry them. He then asks the police to work to make people feel safer and checks on the service they provide.

What are the police concentrating on now?

Reducing:

- priority crimes (these are things like burglary, stealing cars and serious violence)
- anti-social behaviour
- the number of people killed or hurt on the roads
- reoffending (this is where people commit crimes again and again)

Solving more crimes such as:

- when someone is hurt or treated badly by someone they know, like their partner or carer (this is called domestic abuse)
- when someone is made to have sex or touched in a way they don't like

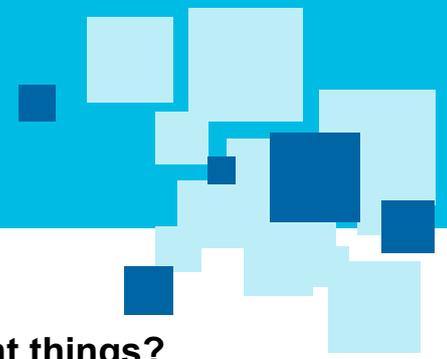

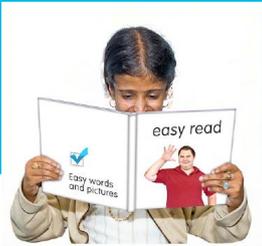

Making sure:

- people feel safe in their community
- everyone is treated fairly
- victims of crime get the help they need

Working together with other organisations, like councils and health, to help with people's problems so they only call the police when they really need them.

Do you think Stephen is asking the police to do the right things?
Yes or No?

Is there something else the police should be doing? What is it?

People and organisations in Norfolk have told Stephen they also worry about these things:

- crimes using a computer - this could be using a virus to make computers go wrong, taking and using people's bank information or using websites like facebook to hurt people or treat them badly
- keeping children and adults safe from people who want to hurt them or make them do things they don't want to
- helping children and young people who get in trouble with the police to stop committing crimes
- helping children and young people who have a crime happen to them or see a crime happen to someone else
- stopping crimes happening to people who have learning disabilities
- stopping people selling and using 'legal highs' (drugs which are not against the law, but can harm the people who take them)

Is there anything that you worry about that is not on that list?
What is it?
